² This text starts with a short manuscript among Davis' writings with the title, "A Few Books Worth Reading." Given its contents, I have decided to use this as an initial basis for a bibliography of books he references in his lectures on the Origin and History of the Bible. He did not give complete bibliographic information, which I have supplemented here in blue. I also have rearranged the order of the books to be alphabetical by author.

Sunderland, Jabez Thomas, The Origin and Character of the Bible and its Place Among Sacred Books, Boston: American Unitarian Association, 1909 (first ed. 1893).
